Can social and economic development be mutually compatible?

Social development should be understood not only as a result (income growth and poverty reduction) but also as a process of change that leads to equality, social and environmental justice, cultural recognition, and democratization of politics. For this, increase in public participation in decision-making is a fundamental component of social development.

Social and economic progress can lead to a better quality of life, but at what cost?

Economic progress often generates environmental effects that, even though they are not immediately evident, may adversely impact biodiversity and natural resources.

At IAIA14 we expect to look at the role of the various instruments of impact assessment on the promotion of social and economic development, considering the importance of the assessment process itself as well as its results. At the conference, experiences and ideas will be shared about how IA outcomes may include efficient and innovative ways to promote social and economic development to benefit quality of life, now and for future generations.

Below are some conference topics:

- Cultural heritage
- Public participation
- Social conflict
- Sustainable development
- SEA/EIA in Latin America
- Indigenous peoples
- Governance
- Biodiversity
- Climate change
- Land use planning and management
- Agriculture, forestry and fisheries
- Natural disasters
- Environmental management systems
- Health impact assessment
- Energy
- Social impact assessment
- Strategic environmental assessment
- Environmental IA law, policies and practice
- Capacity building for better IA systems

IAIA14 gathered experts from around the world who discussed the best approaches to improve environmental protection for our future.

This is essential for EDP’s long-term commitment to sustainable development.
