

Proposed Climate Change Law in Mexico

Luis Vera

lrvera@vc.com.mx

Summary: Mexico will host COP 16 in the following weeks, however, the legislative debate over the adoption of renewed climate change policies is at a crossroad. While the senate wants a general frame law, the house and the executive have been pushing for amendments of the existing laws. To date neither position has succeeded. Impact on the design of environmental policy instruments, and on investment, is foreseeable and a closer look to the process reveals how important the impact will be.